

STRANGE SHOOTING PUZZLE TO POLICE; 2 HIT, 1 MAY DIE

"Pickles" Laydon and Garry Barry Found Wounded With No Weapons Near.

WOMEN SEE AFFRAY.

Wives of the Young Victims Are Warned by Them Not to Squeal.

The metallic-voiced piano in Casey's saloon at No. 329 Adams street, Brooklyn, responding to heavy pounding on its non-too-immaculate keys, was emitting a syncopated accompaniment to the ragtime melody wheeled in "high mowing" tenor by Joe Riley, the "singin' waiter," who serves drinks and songs with equal skill.

Enter Garry Barry, twenty-one years old, and his wife, Margaret, the same age. With them are John Walsh, alias "Pickles" Laydon, twenty-two years old, and his wife, Mary, the same age. A few minutes—a very few—elapse and the piano and mosquito tenor of Joe Riley terminate their harmony in a Wagnerian crash, interpolated with pistol shots that resound, dry and crisp, a block in either direction from the saloon.

Policemen Hagan and Wintermoe, one hundred and fifty feet away, near Myrtle avenue, hear the sharp bark of the firearms and exclaim in unison: "Casey's saloon!" Whereupon they go on the run to that place of refreshment so well known to the Brooklyn police.

BROOKLYN POLICEMEN HAVE GOOD EARS.

Other policemen hear the shots and meet Hagan and Wintermoe at the door.

At the doorway leading from the rear room, where the piano is, Barry is stretched upon the floor, insensible, a hole in his shirt bosom, encircled by a red stain.

Near him, just inside the rear room, lies Walsh, whom the police know better as "Pickles" Laydon, they say, unable to arise because of a bullet in his right leg, but he is conscious and able to groan and snarl his teeth at the police.

Through the drifting revolver smoke the police make out the figure of Edward R. Casey, proprietor of the place. "What's up, Casey?" they ask.

"Oh," Casey replies, "these two guys and their girls came in here and I told 'em to beat it. I didn't want any gangsters hanging around. I said, 'Then the scrap started. I don't know who did the shooting. The guy that did it went that way.'"

Casey points to the door opening into the dingy backyard.

The policemen search everybody in the room. They also go over the whole premises, but do not find a firearm of any description.

The entire company is placed under arrest and ambulatory called from the Holy Family Hospital.

WOMEN HELD AS MATERIAL WITNESSES.

"Hum," says the doctor, who examines Garry Barry's wound. "I don't think this man has a ghost of a chance. The bullet has gone through his lungs."

"Pickles" Laydon raises one hand with a warning gesture.

"You girls get back," he says, "and remember—don't you squeal—don't you dare squeal!"

The two wives are held as material witnesses. So is the other woman in the cafe, who says she is Mrs. Virginia Gillman, thirty-two years old, of No. 164 Franklin avenue, Brooklyn.

Shortly after Barry arrived at the Holy Family Hospital he revived and immediately asked for a priest. The Rev. Father Connolly was summoned from St. Paul's Church on Concord street and performed the last rites for the dying. But Barry made no statement to the police or surgeons.

HANDS OF RICH LAID ON OUR JUDGES, SAYS PAGE.

"Shall This Country Longer Endure?" Asks Novelist at a Dinner of the Virginians.

Thomas Nelson Page, the Rev. Henry Luebeck, Don C. Seitz and Richard E. Byrd, speaker of the House of Delegates of Virginia, made addresses last night at a dinner of the Virginians in Sherry's. At the guests' table were the presidents of many State societies in New York.

Mr. Page, branched from the history of Virginia to the problem of the acquisition of the control of wealth.

"These are men who, had they worked ten hours a day since their early manhood picking up dollars, could not have picked up all the money they possess," said he. "Not content with possessing all this wealth, they have subsidized the machinery of a portion of the country to secure more. They have even sold their hands on the sacred body of the judges, until the question comes up: 'Shall this country which our fathers established any longer be ruled by a few hands?'"

Mr. Page gave high praise to President-elect Wilson as the leader of Democracy of the whole nation.

The eighth annual dinner of the Kansas Society of New York was held in the Waldorf-Astoria. The speakers were Gen. William Crozier, U. S. A.; Assistant District Attorney William A. De Voe; Dr. Frank A. Waugh and the Rev. Dr. Christian B. Reiser.
